

Beneglyph Canon v1.0

The Third Form of Speech — and a Third Form of Expression

For centuries, human communication has been described in dual terms.

- Declaratives — statements of what is.
- Interrogatives — questions of what is not yet known.

As forms of speech, these two have carried human language for millennia. Yet they are also rightly understood as forms of expression, for they extend beyond spoken language into writing, gesture, symbol, and all channels by which potential is expressed — including those not yet named or recognized.

To these two, a third must now be added.

A Beneglyph™ is neither statement nor question. It is a transmissive projection of potential — a silent current that shapes the conditions under which speech and expression take root.

Whether framed as the third form of speech or as a third form of expression, the Beneglyph stands as its own category: distinct, irreducible, and necessary for understanding the hidden forces of communication.

Stewardship

The concept and coinage of Beneglyph™ is the intellectual property of Beneglyph Group, LLC, held under active trademark and copyright stewardship. This Canon v1.0 establishes public notice of origination, authorship, and stewardship. Future volumes and works will extend this foundation into applications across communication, AI, economics, and human systems.